One month ago, a party of gentlemen left. St. Louis, bound for the regions of the upper Mississippi. Tired of heat and dust, they wisely turned their backs upon the fashlonable retreats of Long Branch and Saratoga, resolved to flad some place where the cry of lemonade and peanuts was not heard, or the echoes awakened by the hurdy-gurdy of organ-grinders, for the purpose of indulging in a few weeks of rustic felicity. They were well supplied with all the articles necessary for such a trip. Guns and dogs, lines and fishing tackle, water-proof coats and flasks of Bourbon were stowed away in great variety. All the needful arrangements were made—the parting drink was taken, the last good-by was spoken, and early one fine morning, before the drowsy city had arisen from her slumbers, they steamed away on a gallant craft that the stands unrivaled. After a clog dance by the Reynolds brothers, which was very good, Messrs. Gleason and McLaren gave in quest of thriling adventures and Nimrod triumphs.

In due course of time the band of hunters arrived at Anoka, on the mouth of the Crow River, a short distance above Minneapolis. The country adjacent was reported by the inhabitants to be rich in game, and hiring one or two trustworthy guides the party soon set out for the hunting grounds. By the 28th of July they had their tests pitched on the banks of a beautiful stream, which abounded with trout, while all around them was a country as wild and primal in its solitude as that which greeted the vision of the honest Dutch burghers when selecting a site for the proud City of Gotham. Toward the Father of Waters, to the east of them, were thickly wooded bluffs, while to the west stretched a gently undulating prairie country that promised big things for the sportamen and seemed to laugh with very latness.

Ou striking a fresh light, what was their astonishment to find before them a heap of gold and silver antique coin, which bore every appearance of having lain in the cave for ages. At first they could not believe the evidences of their senses. They stooped down rubbed the pieces between the palms of their hands, bit them, flipped them up and down on the rocky floor, and tried a variety of other tests; but the hard, metallicing of the true metal at last convinced them that they were really in luck, and that Dame Fortune had granted a favor that does not often fall to the lot of ordinary mortals. To gather up the coin, harry back to campand apprise their comrades of this sudden windfall was the work of a sew hours, and soon the whole band were apprised of the remarkable incident.

Competent judges who have seen the treasure, estimate its value at $200,000. From a friend who has seen and conversed with the members of the expedition, and whose statements can be relied upon for correctness, we learn that the coin consists moetly of gold pieces, such as used by the Romans during the reign of the Empero Adrian, and that there are also many medats under the proper of the corrections. We are a little anxious to know how he reconciles a love of the part of his party for the soldier and his family with the fact that his party robbed the widows and orphans of soldiers of $500.000, by transferring that amount from the soldiers relief fund to the sinking fund. This outrage his party perpetrated for no other reason or motive than to prevent the duplicate of the succeeding year showing an increased taxation, and thinly expose their reckless expenditure of money. We merely set out to record a remarkable discovery—one that has created an unparalleled excitement in that region, and which is richer by far in its results than any that the most enthusiastic magician ever dreamed of.

One morning two members of the party set out for an all day's tramp among the bluffs, for the purpose of securing some botanical and geological specimens. They walked vigorously till noon, and procured many interesting collections. Coming to a spring that gushed out from the rocks, they concluded to stop, parcake of their frugal meal, and, after resting awhile, set out again for camp. They were about ready to return, when one of the gentlemen directed the attention of the other to a small aperture.

The set-to between Aaron and Donnavan was a overmatched in length of reach—Aaron has an astonishing advantage in this particular—and science. The little one tried to go in, but was met at every point, and from the set-to of last night we are satisfied of Jones' skill as a consummate boxer. Without the gloves, there would have been half a-dozen knock-down blows, and, without disparagement to Donnavan, all in favor of Jones. Farmer Gypsied Out of $6,000-An Amazing Instance of Superstition and Folly.

A. A. Reeves is a quiet well-to-do farm-er, living about six miles northwest of this city, on the Georgetown road. By hard work and frugal living he had acquired the farm upon which he resides, and about $1,-000 in money. Week before last, however, he was victimized in an almost incredihe was victimized in an almost incredible manner, to the extent of $6,000—an amount which it will, perhaps, take half the earnings of his lifetime to repay.

On Thursday, August 1, 2 company of Gypsies, consisting of three men and one woman, encamped near Mr. Reeves' house. The woman called on Mr. R. the same day. representing to him that she was a clair-voyant fortune-teller, and that she was endowed with a secret gift, which enabled her to reveal the past and future of all things sublunary. Furthermore, she in- that they shall be paid in coin. things sublinary. Furthermore, she informed Mr. R. that she was a spiritualist, and that the spirits had communicated to her the astounding fact that somewhere on his (Mr. R.'s) farm, immense quantities of gold and silver had been hidden by some one at a time "whence the memory of man runneth not to the contrary."

The class of the legal-tender act, would be that the Government may elect whether it will pay this class of bonds in gold or The charming woman continued to visit

Mr. R's house from day to day, and finally informed him that the spirits would not leign to tell where the treasure was de-posited, unless she could be temporarily placed in possession of six thousand doi-lars with which to perform the necessary incantation. Strange as it may seem, Mr. Reeves gave credence to this story—the woman completely infatuated him, leading woman completely infatuated him, leading whithersoever she would. He promised her that he could obtain the money ($6,000); and each swore the other to eternal secrecy. Mr. R. had nine hundred and sixty-five dollars in his own possession, and he quietly borrowed enough from different states. purpose for which he wanted it. Mr. Reeves obeyed these injunctions strictly, telling no one of any part of the transaction, hid what he supposed was his package of six thousand dollars safely away, and at the exact moment when the the $6,000, it only contained the discon-nected fragments of one of Beadle's Dime feelings of disappointment, indignation and chagrin at this stage of the proceed-ings. "Folded their tents like the Arabs, And silently stole away." This is certainly one of the most aston-ishing instances of credulity on record.— In reading it one would suppose the victim must have been insane. But when we consider that Mr. Reeves is an upright, sobe and industrious farmer, the transaction seems almost incredible. It can only be regarded as an additional confirmation of the adage of old: "There is nothing new under the sun."

(From the Chicago Times.) Astonnding Credulity-A Missouri Hon. Geo. H. Pendleton on the New York Tribune-A Question of Veracity.

The Times, on yesterday, commented on articles which appeared on the same day in the New York Times and the New York Tri-bune. charging Hon. Geo. H. Pendleton and the Democracy of Ohio, in the political canvass which is now going on in that State, with a purpose of repudiating the Govern-ment indebtedness.

Mr. Pendleton, in a recent speech, said in substance, that the five-twenty bonds issued by the Government were redeemable according to their terms, in either gold or "greenbacks," at the option of the Governmistatement of fact," and that Mr. Pendle-ton, in making it, did "talk like a villain." Now, it is incumbent on the Tribune to show that the bonds of this class specify

Treasury notes. The statement of Mr. Pendleton was, that the interest on the five-twenties should be paid in coin, but that the Government did not contract to pay the principal.

The act of June 30, 1864, authorizing the issue of $190.000,000 of five-twenties, does say that the interest shall be paid in coin-but it does not say that the principal shall be so paid. The acts of February 25, 1862, and of March 3, 1864, under which $514,000,000 of five-twenties were issued, do not say that either the principal or the interest shall be patd in coin The act of March 3, 1865, under which ferent members of his family to make up $103,542,500 of five-twenties were issued, the thousand dollars, without hinting the does not say that either the principal or the interest shall be paid in coin.

There are about $1,100.000,000 of fiveto Mr. Reece Hughes, to the amount of five thousand dollars, payable in ninety days at 2½ per cent. a month. He thereupon returned home without informing given him, the Government is obligated or has contracted to pay them in coin? A somewhat careful look into the various laws authorizing the issue of five-twenties has convinced us that the Tribune has been more zealous than discreet in charging Mr of it, wrapped it securely in a piece of cotton cloth, and—as if to make assurance doubly sure—she then took a long string and tied it many times around the roll of money. She returned the next day when the five-twenties in gold. Either the Tribula argenties took along string and tied it many times around the roll of money. H. G. has bailed Jeff. Davis, because he believed that a man accused of crime should be granted a trial within a reasonable length of time. This was Democratic-we use the word not in its lexicographical, but has also given the Union League Club and the G. A. R.'s a severe castigation. In this he acted in harmony with Democratic ideas.

Does his frankness, his independence of spirit, his truthfulness and just conceptions, in relation to certain public issues give him an immunity to lie on other ques-

This matter of paying the Government indebtedness in coin or currency must be met with something else than lies or vituperation. It is not a subject which can be "squelched" by such agencies. George H.
Pendleton, in demanding that the Government shall pay its debts according to the four days expired, sought his package and term of its contracts, does not "talk like a found it, but alas! instead of containing villian."

Party interests may be subserved by denected fragments of one of Beadle's Dime nouncing him as one, and by "gross mis-Novels. Our readers can imagine Mr. R.'s statements of facts;" but such tactics can only be temporarily successful. It is not pleasant to charge wilful and deliberate lying on one of the most prominent news-papers in the country; but we submit to our readers the facts, with the injunction to inquire whether this charge, under the circumstances, has transgressed the pro-prieties of journalism.
